

Dr Keith Boardman

I was born in London but spent most of my childhood in Cheshire prior to university studies in Manchester and Edinburgh. From there I progressed to head of an NHS service in Coventry and remained there for 25 years. I have a background in science, electronic engineering and medicine and have spent over 40 years in health technology services in both therapeutic and diagnostic applications, including Information Technology, working in both the NHS and as an independent consultant.

My wife and I moved to Dunchurch in 2005. In 2016 we moved one mile down the road to Thurlaston and very much enjoy the tranquillity and camaraderie of the community. Having settled in, I'm now pleased to be able to support and offer my services to the Parish Council which I joined in 2018. I'm still finding my feet but am getting involved in a number of initiatives, most notably the establishment of a new parish web site. Certainly being on the Parish Council is a great way to get to know villagers and hopefully the development of a new web site will foster even better communications.

I have a keen interest in the management and protection of our environment - from wildlife, conservation, to local planning.

Within the village I participate in a number of activities such as the History Group, Ramblers, Quizzes, Summer Fete, and Bird Watchers.
